Chapter 1

Introduction

Message One can help you when you send short messages to a group of people. You only need to select recipients and create a template which has some text fields. Then Message One generates messages from your template for each recipient, replaces text fields with corresponding information of the recipient.

For example, you want to send messages to John and Rose. You put template “Hello [LAST NAME]”. Message One will send “Hello John” to John and “Hello Rose” to Rose. Message One gets the field information from your phone contact book.

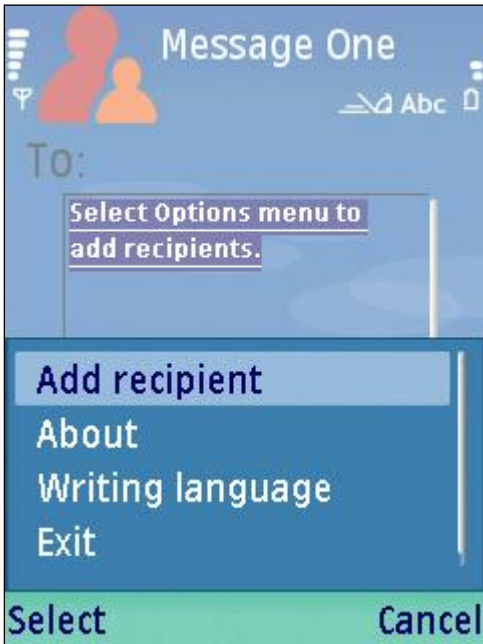

Message One supports many contact book fields. For detailed information please refer to next chapter.

Below are some screenshots of Message One.

Chapter 2

Usage Guide

When you open Message One, you need to add recipient to your recipient list. You can select Options menu to add recipient. You can also press phone navigation button to add recipient.

Then you can select recipient in your contact book. Mark the checkbox of your desired recipient. Select OK when you have selected all your recipients.

You can review your recipient list. You can modify the list any time. Press Next to go to next step.

Now you can input your template. Select Fields when you want to insert a field into your template.

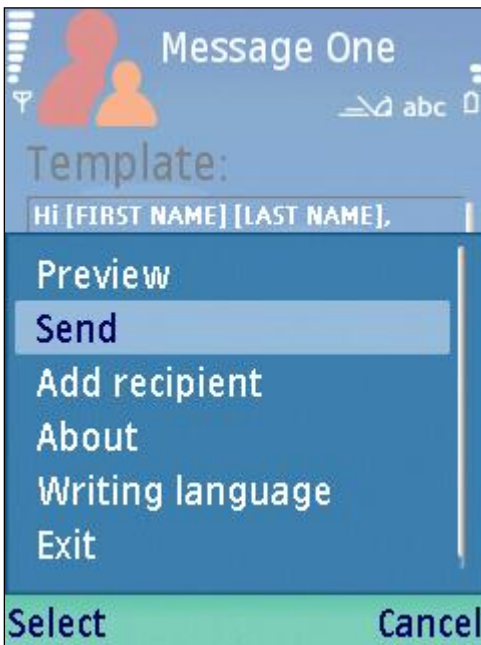

Message One supports 16 fields: first name, middle name, last name, nick name, mobile number, home number, work number, car number, email, job title, company name, city, state, street address, note and birthday.

Left picture is a sample template which contains 3 fields. Select Options menu and you can preview the final message content which Message One will send out.

Message One always takes your first recipient's information to make preview.

Finally you can send out message. Message One generates messages one by one for all your recipients.

NOTE: Message One generates messages in your phone outbox. Your phone will schedule and send out them automatically. Message One does not monitor the sending status of these messages.
